

URL: <https://stvp.stanford.edu/blog/videos/vinod-khosla-bit-by-the-entrepreneurship-bug>

Vinod Khosla, partner at Kleiner, Perkins, Caufield & Byers, was bitten by the entrepreneurship bug early in life when he heard about Intel starting up. He was enamored by the idea of being able to start your own company. Intel served as a great role model, he says.

Transcript

The entrepreneurship bug grabbed me very early in life.. I was probably 14 when I read about Intel starting up.. I was born in '55 so you can figure it out.. It was probably in the late '60s that I first read about Intel starting up in these trade rags that you used to get and they reached India generally a year late and you could rent them.. I just was enamored by the idea of having to start your own company and I have pursued that dream since and never regretted it.. The corollary is role model is really an example and Intel served as a great role model for me...